The most interesting experiment in government since the government of the United States passed beyond the experimental stage is the new Commonwealth of Australia. The federation bearing that name is yet to be accepted by the Australian colonies, or three out of five of these communities, and then by the parliament of Great Britain. Unless objection is made to those features which so nearly give complete autonomy to Australia, and it would not be wise to object to the inevitable, indeed to existing political fact, the almost certain ratification of the constitution by three colonies will be speedily followed by the assent of the mother country. The course of events from 1776 to the present moment has been a steady and increasing recognition of the rights of Englishmen as self-governing people in all the dependencies of Great Britain. The lesson of George III and Lord North sufficed forever As fast as the colony acquires the strength it wishes to play the national role. Even in the case of Ireland English statesmanship is awakening to the becessity for home rule in some form. It is not probable that Ireland will ever be again a separate power, but it is morally certain that she will have practical self-government within a very few years. Of course in the im probable event that the prestige of Great Britain is ever destroyed and it loses its place among the greater nations of the earth, as Holland has lost hers, an Irish republic may arise. The project of a British imperial confederation embracing such widely separated states as England, Australia, Canada, Guiana, India and Cape Colony or South Africa is a glittering speculation not half as substantial as the similar suggestion in Franklin's day, notwithstanding telegraph cables and fast steamships have measurably obliterated space. Colonial representation is not working well in the Spanish Cortes. The true federal principle is that which binds contiguous and homogeneous states. No other scheme of federation is practicable. The Commonwealth of Australia may enable the great historian of federal government, Dr. Freeman, to resume his labors which were interrupted in 1870, it is understood, by his desire to see the result of the workings of the new German empire and his apprehension that the federal principle would be impaired by the excess of influence in Prussia and the house of Hohenzollern. He and other friends of that principle may look to Brazil and Australia and even to Canada for its vindication, if the United States do not afford all the evidence a critical mind requires.

Political revolutions usually bring social and industrial chaos. It is well if they are so handled that concessions are made in the beginning or afterward in such a manner that order may eventually come out of chaos. A case in point is Belgium, where the working class have probably secured nearly all they demanded in the revision of the constitution in the direction of universal suffrage. Out of six million people the present number of voters is only 133,000, comprising the wealthiest and most intelligent inhabitants. If it be true, as reported, that the King has prevailed upon these classes to concede to popular demand a large extension of the suffrage, then Belgium's future will depend upon the manner in which the right conferred is exercised by the enfranchised mass. Trouble is averted for the present and a more representative government

Elsewhere in THE STAR information is given of the partial endowment of an Episcopal Cathedral for Washington. The preworthy and inspiring one. The advantages to Washington of a great, free Protestant Cathedral, with its magnificent building, adding to the city's architectural attractiveness, with its nected institutions, charitable, educational; and missionary, and with the substantial contribution which it involves to the religious influences and facilities at the capital, are obvious and striking. This endowment will doubtless operate by way of suggestion to those who seek for the best opportunities for such good works, and will be but the first in a series of gifts that will speedily bring into existence the perfected cathedral.

Souvenire Or THE "OPENING" AT THE PALAIS ROYAL

The new season's goods at the wholesale prices are the practical souvenirs of these occasions. On MONDAY, MAY 25, commences the Fourteenth Annual Sum-"Opening." The list below gives no idea of the magnitude of the stocks or of the qualities. An illustration of superior quality are the $1 Black Lace Flound ings quoted on the souvenir list as reduced from $1.19. That such quality lace usually retails at $1.75 a yard many of our patrons are awars. We have bought very advantageously, since merchants generally are still absorbed in disposing of spring stock and thus, the wholesale markets are slimly attended and low prices prevail. In inviting you to the "Opening" on Monday we can promise the largest and most complete collection of summer furnishings ever gathered by the Palais
